attributes Margaret's escape not to her own gesture of making the sign of the cross, but to the actual cross on which Christ was crucified. Mirk says that the dragon took Margaret into his mouth, but not that he swallowed her. Lydgate's dragon gets only as far as Margaret's head before he splits open.

Curiously, The Stanzaic Life of Christ, the earlier mentioned text from the middle of the 14th century, contains a significant number of strongly contrasting monophthongal forms, with long [e:] and long [i:] (37: IH + YE). The most complicated distribution is found in the relatively late manuscript of The
