His hope for a sustainable future is based on new regionalism, a theory of design which holds that structure and landscape should be informed and inspired by the surrounding ecosystem. Steiner uses Austin, TX as an example of the benefit. Written in the shadow of a disastrous decade, Design for a Vulnerable Planet is a gentle and passionate attempt to redirect humanity's environmental missteps.

If this year has taught the world anything so far, it's that the planet is in serious crisis-mode. Greenhouse gas emissions have caused the planet's average surface temperature to rise, oceans to warm, and ice sheets to shrink. Polar bears have become a vulnerable species. Every year, 18 billion pounds of plastic—much more than just straws—enters the oceans, causing
