Minus 148 Degrees, Anniversary Edition: First Winter Ascent of Mount McKinley (Legends and Lore) It was an audacious gambit, one that had never been attempted before, and which almost ended from the get-go. That only one life was lost during the first winter ascent of Mount McKinley in Denali National Park itself could be seen as an achievement, as the eight climbers who set out to stand atop the North American continent's tallest mountain at 20,320 feet did so in mid-winter 1967.

Minus 148 Degrees by Art Davidson - Goodreads

Climber Art Davidson on the 1st Winter Ascent of Denali, Adventure, and Surviving 'Minus 148 Degrees'. On February 28, 1967, Dave Johnston, Art Davidson, and Ray Genet became the first climbers to stand on Mt. McKinley's 20,322-foot summit in winter. On the descent, the weather turned, and they dug a tiny snow cave above 18,000 feet and hung on for six days and nights, barely able to sit up in what they wondered would be an icy grave.
