“Murder in the Museum” by John Rowland is a really good, old-fashioned police detective murder mystery story, taking place in the mid-1930s in greater London, a classic “who-done-it”. While this genre has never really appealed to me – for a variety of reasons, one of which is that they are usually slow-paced and boring – but I took a chance on this one, and it paid off.

Murder in the Museum by John Rowland - Books-A-Million

When Professor Julius Arnell breathes his last in the hushed atmosphere of the British Museum Reading Room, it looks like death from natural causes. Who, after all, would have cause to murder a retired academic whose life was devoted to Elizabethan literature? Inspector Shelley's suspicions are aroused when he finds a packet of poisoned sugared almonds in the dead man's pocket; and Murder in the Museum: A British Library Crime Classic ...

In spite of the fact that the subject is murder, John Rowland's Murder in the Museum starts on a very light note. There's a lot here that seems tongue-in-cheek: the poisoned sugared almond, the bitter rivalry of Elizabethan scholars, and that makes Murder in the Museum a well-written romp of a crime story.
