The Day I Left the Left. Jim Goad It was a long and painful process, like an old car where the parts start to go and then one day the engine finally throws a rod. One experience after the other led to more chinks in my ideological armor than there were Chinks in Mao's Red Army. Against my better wishes, I found I do not have the ...

I finished my experiment and hurried to store my samples. I had a train to catch, and I was cutting it close. "Ugh, I should just stay in the lab to get a few more experiments done. I'm not even sure what I'll get out of the career development symposium," I thought to myself. I had started a postdoc position 8 months earlier and needed to gather preliminary data to bulk up a fellowship ...
