The Glass Magician (The Paper Magician): Holmberg, Charlie ...

The Glass Magician is more or less recycling its earlier novel in The Paper Magician series. While some books can pull this off and resurrect all the elements readers loved from earlier instalments while still crafting something new, this book is still trapped in the same awkward, borderline-disturbing romance thing between a magician and his student, and much of the story dwells on this instead of anything new in the plot.

The Glass Magician by Charlie N. Holmberg

The Glass Magician is set in an alternate New York City during the Gilded Age. While I am not a major fan of historical fiction, I found the Glass Magician to be an interesting read. It follows the story of Thalia who is a young stage magician (really cool!) who discovers the extent of her powers.

Dale Chihuly (center) Dale Chihuly is a groundbreaking contemporary American glassblower. I remember seeing his sculptures when I was younger at Chihuly Garden and Glass in Seattle and being baffled by the complexity and gravity-defying nature of his art. I wondered how on earth the sculpture was still standing.
